TODAYS READINGS

First Reading

Isaiah 50:4-7

Any parent or teacher advances in wisdom through listening. The best responses to their children's needs or questions only follow deep listening and reflection. A Christian view of these important relationships and responsibilities adds further perspective. Since 'the Lord has opened my ear,' and because 'he provides me with speech,' no one need be left to rely only on their own natural aptitudes or abilities. God leaves no disciple unaided.

Second Reading

Philippians 2:6-11

Our most significant and enduring relationships in life tend to be formed with people who have put themselves out for us. A self-sacrificing love is characteristic of parents, spouses, deeply committed friends, among others. These relationships are a key to understanding how God in Jesus loves us. This passage is St Paul's great hymn of praise for the incarnation, death and exaltation of Jesus. Paul sees and extols Jesus' readiness to sacrifice himself fully for others (which he terms kenosis, 'self-emptying').

Gospel Reading

Mark 14:1-15:47 (shorter - 15:1-39)

The gospel accounts of the Passion frequently call forth the question of why the innocent suffer. Today's second reading helps us by pointing out that this is to ask the wrong question. The several details which underscore Jesus' innocence (e.g. the attempt to arrest Jesus 'by some trick'; Jesus is betrayed; false and conflicting evidence is offered; Pilate sees that jealousy drives the chief priests to act against Jesus, etc) serve to place the emphasis in the Passion on the readiness of God's Son, despite his distress, to sacrifice himself out of love for others.
